Collective Manifestation Envisions New Era of Creativity and Unity

Seattle, WA, September 15, 2014 -- Collective Manifestation: Heart-Centered Blueprints for Creating Intentional Community, a nonfiction book by Melissa Wadsworth, launching October 9th, 2014, offers an inspired vision of the future that is collaborative, creative and progressive, and that is being manifested right now through diverse groups and communities worldwide.

According to Wadsworth who broadly defines community as inclusive of both online and physical groups, Collective Manifestation is a game-changer that is part social-change manifesto, part inspiring self-help guide. She wrote the book to help leaders and organizers to form cohesive groups that manifest goals and dreams through the force of intention, focus and multidimensional play.

“Whether they occupy physical space, are event-based or are online, intentional communities are planting the seeds for new realizations of love, peace and plenty, related to the environment, the economy, technology, education, healing modalities, property ownership, and much more,” said Wadsworth.

Collective Manifestation offers practical organizational exercises and perception expanding intuitive processes that can be used independently or layered as part of community design. For instance, the essential “11 Keys to Collective Manifestation” that Wadsworth identifies came out of the various intuitive processes her own community used during its foundational stage, which are also shared in the book.

Wadsworth believes that there is a surge in collective participation and contribution that is being sparked by several factors. First, technological advances make “face-to-face” interaction possible between people who would never have met each other ten years ago. As she stated, “Amongst innovators, leaders, and self-initiators I spoke with there is a growing growing desire to bypass the stagnancy of old societal structures that create barriers to innovation and the evolving collective consciousness. Great creativity and new thinking is emerging from this desire.”

Additionally, Wadsworth identifies primary energetic shifts that are inspiring people to connect in newly collaborative ways. Among the shifts identified are:

- The shift from consumer to creator
- The shift from exclusive to inclusive
- The shift from hard work to focused play
- The shift from mental dictatorship to heart leadership
- The shift from separation from to being one with all living beings.

“Significant change is happening in every area of modern life and people are sensing that they can have a positive role in manifesting a different reality than the one being generated by popular media,” said Wadsworth. “The people I spoke with are highly engaged and enthusiastic about their own potential and the possibilities being presented by a world in flux. Intentional communities are innovating sustainable ways to live, solving social problems, refocusing business leadership, expanding creativity, and redefining how to participate in community.” said Wadsworth.

The book is highly accessible and useful, covering diverse topics such as the new customizable economies, how to release and clear old wounds, and why it’s time to rethink one’s relationship with property and real estate. It is designed to generate discussions about how global communities full of fearless co-creators and compassionate instigators can facilitate collaborative curiosity and cooperative creativity to expand what is possible for humanity and this planet at a pivotal time.
